The Myth of Persephone

The goddess of harvest, Demeter had a daughter named Persephone. Demeter loved Persephone very much. Demeter watched Persephone play in a field of flowers every day while Demeter attended to the crops.

One day, Persephone was filling her basket with flowers, when Hades, the god of the Underworld, decided to come to earth. Hades saw Persephone from his chariot. He fell in love with her. He captured her. She screamed for her mother. In her fright she dropped the flowers she had collected.

Echo

Echo was a nymph who talked too much. She was very fond of having the last word. One day she spoke rudely to her mother Hera. Hera punished Echo by taking away her voice. Echo could only repeat what she had just heard.

This was almost as bad as if Hera had turned her into a parrot. Echo was very ashamed, and hid herself in the forest.

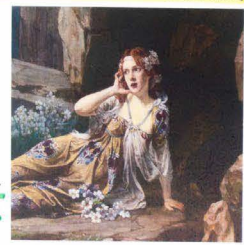

Narcissus was a young man who had hair as yellow as gold and eyes as blue as the sky. This is a very rare thing in Greece, where most people were very dark. Narcissus hunted in the forest where Echo was hiding. As she was peeping out shyly from some cave or from behind a great tree, Echo often saw Narcissus. She loved him very much.

One day Narcissus became separated from his friends. He heard something rustle among the leaves and called out, "Who's here?"

"Here," answered Echo.

"Here I am, Come!" said Narcissus.

"I am come," said Echo. As she spoke, she came out from among the trees.

When Narcissus saw a stranger, instead of one of his friends as he had expected, he looked surprised and walked quickly away.

After this, Echo never came out and allowed herself to be seen again. In time she faded away until she became only a voice.

This voice was heard for many, many years in forests and among mountains, particularly in caves. Hunters often heard it. Sometimes it mocked the barking of their dogs; sometimes it repeated their own last words. It always had a weird and mournful sound, and seemed to make lonely places more lonely still.

- Color-coding
- Follows best practices for standardized assessments

The image displays several sample assessment pages for the myth of Apollo and Daphne. The pages include:

- A page titled "TEST: The Myth of Apollo and Daphne" with a Lexile level of 530. It contains the text of the myth with color-coded words and phrases. A small illustration of Eros is included.
- A page titled "Recount Myths" with questions about the myth. One question asks "What happened to Daphne in the end?" with multiple-choice options. Another question asks "What did Apollo do after he found Daphne?"
- A page titled "Recount Myths" with instructions to underline text evidence in a color and answer questions. Questions include "Why did Apollo tease Eros for his little arrows?" and "Why did Apollo chase Daphne?"
- A page titled "Recount Myths" with a question about the text evidence used to answer a question.

Crayola crayons in various colors (blue, orange, yellow, green, purple, pink, red) are scattered around the pages, some appearing to be used for color-coding the text.

WHY IT WORKS

- Certified Lexile measures
- High - interest texts to motivate readers
- Diverse genres
- Scaffold approach will help your students meet grade level expectations.
- Classroom tested! Trusted by over 1,000 teachers... and counting!...

ALIGNS TO SCIENCE OF READING

Research shows that wide reading has the biggest impact on student reading progress.

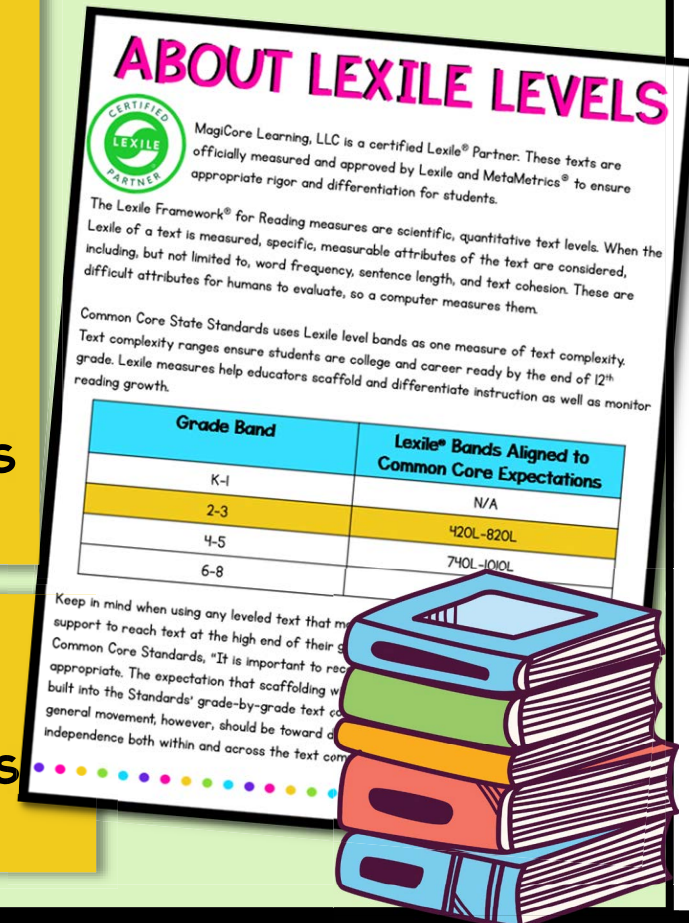

Our passages provide that essential variety of nonfiction structures and topics.

Students need scaffolded instruction to access grade level texts. Without it, students are not exposed to linguistic and textural features, putting them further behind.

Our texts help students grow full-steam ahead. With certified Lexile levels in the Common Core text complexity band, students will 100% engage with appropriate text and sentence structures, vocabulary, and more. Plus, every passage provides teachers with opportunities to scaffold instruction.

Fun fact! From 2nd grade on, students make greater reading gains when taught from texts that are as much as two grade levels above their "instructional" reading level.

Lead the way! Our texts are leveled to master grade-level expectations and set students up for success.

CERTIFIED LEXILE PARTNER

MagiCore Learning, LLC is a certified Lexile® Partner. These texts are officially measured and approved by Lexile and MetaMetrics® to ensure appropriate rigor and differentiation for students.

The Lexile Framework® for Reading measures are scientific, quantitative text levels. When the Lexile of a text is measured, specific, measurable attributes of the text are considered, including, but not limited to, word frequency, sentence length, and text cohesion. These are difficult attributes for humans to evaluate, so a computer measures them.

Common Core State Standards uses Lexile level bands as one measure of text complexity. Text complexity ranges ensure students are college and career ready by the end of 12th grade. Lexile measures help educators scaffold and differentiate instruction as well as monitor reading growth.

Keep in mind when using any leveled text that may not be appropriate for all students. Support to reach text at the high end of their reading level is necessary. Common Core Standards, "It is important to recognize that scaffolding is not appropriate. The expectation that scaffolding will be used to help students reach the general movement, however, should be toward independence both within and across the text complexity bands."

King Midas and the Golden Touch

One day Silenus, who was the oldest of the satyrs, became lost in the vineyards of King Midas. King Midas found him wandering helplessly about, scarcely able to walk. He brought Silenus to the god Bacchus. Silenus had helped raise Bacchus when his mother died. Now Bacchus took care of Silenus.

In return for this kindness, Bacchus promised to grant whatever King Midas might ask. King Midas knew what he most desired. He thought gold was the most beautiful and the most precious thing in the world. Nothing gave him more pleasure than to add to his gold collection.

King Midas asked Bacchus that whatever he touched might be turned into gold. His wish was granted. King Midas could not believe his good fortune.

At the time his wish was granted he was under an oak tree. He raised his hand and touched one of the branches. Immediately the branch became the richest gold. He laughed triumphantly. Then he touched a small stone. This became a solid gold nugget. Then he picked an apple from a tree. He held a beautiful, bright, gold apple in his hand.

Oh, there was no doubt about it. King Midas really had the Golden Touch! He thought it was too good to be true. He went around touching everything to turn it into gold.

© John Baker

King Midas got hungry and sat down to lunch. There was fresh corn and juicy grapes. But when he tasted a grape from one of the clusters, it became a hard ball of gold in his mouth. This was very unpleasant. He laid the gold ball on the table. He tried the fresh corn. His mouth was filled with hard yellow metal. Feeling as if he were choking, he took a sip of water. At the touch of his lips even the water became liquid gold.

Then all his bright treasures began to look ugly to him. His heart grew as heavy as if that, too, were turning to gold.

That night King Midas lay down under a gorgeous golden bed. His head laid upon a pillow of solid gold. He could not sleep. As he lay there, he began to fear that his queen, his little children, and all his kind friends, might be changed to golden statues.

Poor Midas saw now that riches were not the most desirable of all things. He was cured forever of his love of gold. The instant it was daylight he rushed to Bacchus. He begged the god to take back his fatal gift.

© John Baker

"Ah," said Bacchus, smiling, "so you have gold enough. Very well. Go and bathe in the spring where the river Pactolus rises. The pure water of that spring will wash away the Golden Touch."

King Midas gladly obeyed. He became free from the golden touch. But the strange magic was imparted to the waters of the spring. To this day the river Pactolus has golden sands.

The Myth of Prometheus

On the top of Mount Olympus the palaces of the gods were scattered in the sky. In one of these grand palaces lived two giants, Prometheus and Epimetheus. They were brothers, and were loved because of their goodness and wisdom.

Prometheus was the wiser brother. He had visions and he saw far into the future. He even could foretell the deeds of the leader of the gods, Zeus. One day he looked down upon the earth. He saw that men were neither as wise nor as happy as they could be. He was determined to help them.

Prometheus knew that fire would help the men in many ways. Fire was sacred to the gods. Prometheus knew that giving men fire would cause the rest of the gods to be angry. Despite this, he took fire to the earth. He gave it to the poor men who were living in caves, and were cold and hungry, unloving and unloved. After they had received the gift of fire, these men began to grow wiser. They built better houses, ate better food, and dressed in better clothing.

Soon Zeus saw that a great change had taken place in the lives of the people of the earth. Instead of being glad, he was very angry. He thought that Prometheus wanted to take his place as ruler over the gods. He was angry, because Prometheus had stolen the sacred fire.

He planned a terrible punishment for the kind-hearted giant. Zeus chained Prometheus to the rocks which overlooked the angry seaways. Zeus sent a vulture to torment him with its beak and talons.

While Prometheus lay chained to the rocks, a group of water-nymphs came up out of the ocean, and sang songs of comfort and sympathy. Prometheus was freed at last, after much suffering. Freedom and right always triumph.

TEST: The Myth of Apollo and Daphne

One day Eros, the little god of love, sat on the bank of a river. He was playing with his arrows. The arrows were very tiny. Some had points of gold. Others had points of lead. None of them looked as if they could do harm.

That day Apollo, the great sun-god, walked along the bank of the same river. He was returning from a fight with a python. He had just used his wonderful golden arrows to kill the python. He was very proud of his victory. When he saw Eros he said, "What are such little arrows good for?"

Eros' feelings were very hurt. He said nothing. He took his little arrows and flew to the top of Mount Parnassus. There he sat down on the grass and took an arrow. Looking all about, he saw Daphne walking through a grove. Daphne was the daughter of Peneus, the river-god. She was beautiful. Eros shot the arrow straight at Daphne's heart. Although it did her no harm, this little arrow made Daphne feel afraid. She began to run.

Then Eros, who was very naughty, took a golden-pointed arrow. He shot it at Apollo. The golden-pointed arrow had the power to make Apollo love the first thing he saw. Just then, Daphne ran by.

© 2015 Eidos

Apollo called to Daphne that there was nothing to fear. She would not stop running. He ran after her. The faster Apollo followed the faster Daphne ran. She grew more and more afraid, for the little arrow was sticking in her heart.

She ran until she came to the bank of her father's river. She was so tired that she could run no farther. She called her father for help. The river-god changed her into a beautiful tree.

When Apollo came, there she stood, on the bank of the river. She was not a nymph any longer, but a beautiful tree. Apollo was broken-hearted that he lost Daphne. Since this tree was all that was left of Daphne, Apollo loved the tree. He planted the tree by the side of his temple. He made himself a crown from its leaves, which he always wore. This tree still grows in Greece, and is called the Laurel of Apollo.
