Crumbled buildings. Dusty roads. Lonely homes. Silence. A ghost town. Have you ever been to one? Some people find ghost towns peaceful. Many people find them creepy. There are many ghost towns all over the world. They were all once busy and active towns but have since been deserted. They still show signs of the people and places that were once there, however. Some ghost towns are still standing, while others are almost gone. While ghost towns don't necessarily have ghosts, many people claim that they are haunted. Some people even report seeing ghosts or other eerie things. Places can become ghost towns for many reasons. Sometimes towns or cities are built because something valuable has been found there. For example, when gold was discovered in California, many people moved there. They wanted to get rich. They quickly set up towns in California to mine the gold. When the gold ran out, the towns were abandoned.

Crumbled buildings. Dusty roads. Lonely homes. Silence. A ghost town. Have you ever been to one? Some people find ghost towns peaceful. Many people find them creepy.

There are many ghost towns all over the world. They were all once busy and active towns but have since been deserted. They still show signs of the people and places that were once there, however. Some ghost towns are still standing, while others are almost gone.

While ghost towns don't necessarily have ghosts, many people claim that they are haunted. Some people even report seeing ghosts or other eerie things.

Places can become ghost towns for many reasons. Sometimes towns or cities are built because something valuable has been found there. For example, when gold was discovered in California, many people moved there. They wanted to get rich. They quickly set up towns in California to mine the gold. When the gold was gone, however, the people moved away. Those towns became ghost towns. This occurred many other times with other natural resources such as coal and diamonds.

Natural and man-made disasters can turn towns into ghost towns, too. Floods, droughts, fires, and power plant accidents all do damage.

Plan how to decorate your Ghost Town with your math skills.

Market your Ghost Town.

For the Teacher

This Ghost Town Attraction Project Based Learning packet will provide your students with a variety of engaging and fun learning challenges using the theme of designing a ghost town. Students will practice map skills, math with money and budgeting, research, and persuasive writing. This PBL packet can be used with students in grades 2-5. There are differentiated reading passages and math challenges to suit your student's needs.

Directions:

1. Decide if your class will complete the project as a whole group, in small groups, or independently.
2. Copy packets and provide students with materials necessary to complete the packet.
3. Students should complete the project over several days.
4. Preview the activity with your students.
5. Challenge activities can be assigned or can be optional.
6. Students will complete the self-evaluation reflection rubric.
7. Allow students an opportunity to share their completed projects.

Suggested Challenge Order & Teaching Notes:

1. Have students read the informational passage titled, "What Are Ghost Towns?" to activate their thinking and provide background knowledge. Note: This passage is written at three different Lexile levels.
2. Allow students to complete their own research on a ghost town. Provide students access to the QR codes to scan. They can randomly select one or you can assign one to them. These QR codes will take students to the Google Earth location of a specific ghost town. Students will complete the Ghost Town Profile using information provide by the Google Earth link and further online research of their own. Optional: If you do not want to use the QR codes, let students explore the internet to find their own ghost town to learn more about. Note: You could extend this activity into a writing activity by having students compile their Ghost Town Profile into a written response. Students can share their research with the class or post their work on a bulletin board.

3. Explain to students that they have purchased a ghost town to turn into an attraction for others to visit. Before they can open the gates, they must be ready for guests and promote their ghost town on the internet.
4. Have students complete the Ghost Town Attraction Brainstorm organizer.
5. Students will need to follow the guidelines to create a map of their ghost town, so that guests know how to get around and what to check out. Optional: Find theme park maps online to give students examples (bonus if the parks are in your area!). Students can complete their final maps on the template provided or on large white paper or graphing paper.
6. Have students purchase decorations for their Welcome Center. Note: there are three versions of this math challenge for you to choose from, based on the level of your students.
7. Introduce students to some descriptive words that work well when describing a ghost town. There are 12 vocabulary word cards that are perfect to hang around the room for students to see.
8. Let students refer back to their brainstorming sheet and create a logo and a slogan for their ghost town attraction. If needed, use the "Creating A Logo & Slogan" chart to help students understand the purpose of these.
9. Have students create a website for their ghost town. Encourage students to make their website engaging to possible customers! Optional: Allow students to take their website draft and put it to action, using a free website program, such as Google Sites.
10. Students should complete the writing assignment describing their ghost town attraction. Allow students to refer back to their maps, logo, slogan, and website for ideas. They should also include many of the new descriptive vocabulary words they have learned.

What Are Ghost Towns?

790L

Broken skeletons of buildings. Abandoned dusty roads. Rusting equipment. Quiet. Too quiet. This might be the scene you encounter if you've stumbled into a ghost town. Such towns were once bustling with activity only to become like graveyards. The label "ghost town" is applied to any city, town, or village that is deserted but has visible remains of a settlement. A settlement is an area where people have developed a community. Ghost towns don't necessarily have ghosts, although ghost sightings and other paranormal activity have sometimes been reported in them.

Places can become ghost towns for different reasons. Sometimes settlements are built due to the discovery of a natural resource in an area. For example, when gold was discovered in western United States, people flocked there. They wanted to get rich. They quickly set up towns, known as boomtowns, near the gold to mine it. When the gold was gone, the people moved on. The boomtowns then became ghost towns.

Another cause of ghost towns is changes in routes. When new interstate highways were built, old roads were closed. This action cut off access to smaller towns. The same thing happened when railroads were abandoned or re-directed, or when dams were built. With travel made more difficult, people left these once lively towns.

Natural and man-made disasters can create ghost towns, too. Floods, droughts, fires, and nuclear power plant accidents all affect areas. When it is no longer safe to live there or the damage is too great to rebuild, people must find another place to settle. A ghost town is what is left behind. In some cases, dangerous wildlife, such as rattlesnakes, take over what remains of the town.

Some historic ghost towns are now tourist attractions. Visitors can see what life was like when that town was alive and well. Bodie, California is one such site, first described as a ghost town in 1915. It is a gold-mining ghost town that once had 10,000 people living in it. Guests can walk along the empty streets. Over 200 wooden buildings can be viewed. A peek in the windows of structures such as the church, schoolhouse, and barbershop reveal personal belongings that were left behind.

Garnet, Montana is another ghost town you can visit. This town was developed in the 1890s. Red garnets, a type of semi-precious gemstone, were discovered as people searched for gold. In 1905, the town shrank as garnets and gold became harder to find. A fire destroyed most of the town in 1912. Garnet then became a ghost town. About 30 buildings remain today, including a dozen cabins, a store, a saloon, and parts of a hotel. Guests can walk on self-guided trails to tour the ghost town.

Ghost towns are interesting historical sites. They reveal what life was like at one point in time. They also show how fast life can change.
