"Marcos! What are you doing right now?"

I cringe with my video game controller in my hand. Whenever my mamá asks that question, it usually means she has something for me to do. I don't mind doing things for her, but sometimes I'm really into the game I'm playing or I'm close to beating the level I'm on. I'm in a zone and having to stop breaks my flow. When my older sister, Roja, was living at home, Mamá usually bugged her to do stuff. Since Roja went off to college, however, I'm the official chore guy.

"Marcos?"

Modern and relatable takes on the classic fairytales:

- Little Red Riding Hood
 - Rapunzel
 - Rumpelstiltskin

I strum a few strings while I scroll online to find a new song to learn. An advertisement makes me pause and let out a little squeal. My favorite band, Lonely Tower, is coming to my town for a seaside concert! Tonight!

I put my guitar down and race from my attic bedroom all the way down to the kitchen where I find my mother at the stove.

"Mom!" She jumps and fumbles with a wooden spoon, splattering marinara sauce onto the floor. "You scared me, Zella!" She points to the red splotch on the beige tile. "Clean that up."
