ANCHOR CHART

- Anchor chart breaking down contrasting points of view
- Practice passage and warmup activity sheet
- Use to introduce the skill
- Students reference throughout the unit
- Use in student journal as a reference

The anchor chart is a collection of educational materials. At the top, it features a passage titled "Contrast Point of View" with the instruction: "Let's Try! Read the passage 'Party Time' below, then answer the questions on the graphic organizer." The passage describes Madison's preparations for a party, contrasting her own perspective with that of her sister Abby. Below the passage is a graphic organizer titled "Contrast Point of View" with the following sections:

- What is Point of View? Point of view lets the reader know who is telling the story.
- What is Perspective? Perspective shows the character's beliefs about something.
- Authors can choose: A table with columns for Type of POV, Definition, and Keywords.
- Authors develop perspective by: A list of options: showing point of view, showing the character's feelings, thoughts, dialogue, and actions.
- Questions to ask: A list of questions to guide analysis.
- To analyze the point of view and perspective of a story: A numbered list of five steps.

Below the graphic organizer is a table titled "Contrast Point of View" with the subtitle "Graphic organizer to compare two characters' perspectives". The table has columns for First Person, Second Person, and Third Person, and rows for Character #1 and Character #2. The table is partially filled with handwritten notes comparing Abby and Madison.

	First Person	Second Person	Third Person
Character #1	Abby		Character #2
Character #2		Madison
Narrator		Supporting Character

The anchor chart is surrounded by various school supplies like pencils, pens, and highlighters, and is set against a background of colorful paper.

- Classroom tested! Trusted by over 1,000 teachers... and counting!... To help students grow their reading skills

ALIGNS TO SCIENCE OF READING

Research shows that wide reading has the biggest impact on student reading progress.

Our passages provide that essential variety of fiction structures and topics.

Students need scaffolded instruction to access grade level texts. Without it, students are not exposed to linguistic and textural features, putting them further behind.

Our texts help students grow full-steam ahead. With certified Lexile levels in the Common Core text complexity band, students will 100% engage with appropriate text and sentence structures, vocabulary, and more. Plus, every passage provides teachers with opportunities to scaffold instruction.

Fun fact! From 2nd grade on, students make greater reading gains when taught from texts that are as much as two grade levels above their "instructional" reading level.

Lead the way! Our texts are leveled to master grade-level expectations and set students up for success.

CERTIFIED LEXILE PARTNER

ABOUT LEXILE LEVELS

MagCore is a certified Lexile® Partner. These texts are officially measured and approved by Lexile and MetaMetrics® to ensure appropriate rigor and differentiation for students.

The Lexile Framework® for Reading measures are scientific, quantitative text levels. When the Lexile of a text is measured, specific, measurable attributes of the text are considered, including, but not limited to, word frequency, sentence length, and text cohesion. These are difficult attributes for humans to evaluate, so a computer measures them.

Common Core State Standards uses Lexile level bands as one measure of text complexity. Text complexity ranges ensure that students are college and career ready by the end of 12th grade. Lexile measures help educators scaffold and differentiate instruction, as well as monitor reading growth.

Grade Band	Lexile® Bands Aligned to Common Core Expectations
K-1
2-3	N/A
4-5	420L-820L
6-8	740L-1010L
	925L-1351L

Keep in mind when using any leveled text that many students will need support to reach text at the high end of their grade band. The expectation that scaffolding will occur with appropriate. "It is important to recognize that scaffolding is built into the Standards' grade-by-grade text complexity expectations. The general movement, however, should be toward decreasing scaffolding independence both within and across the text complexity bands."

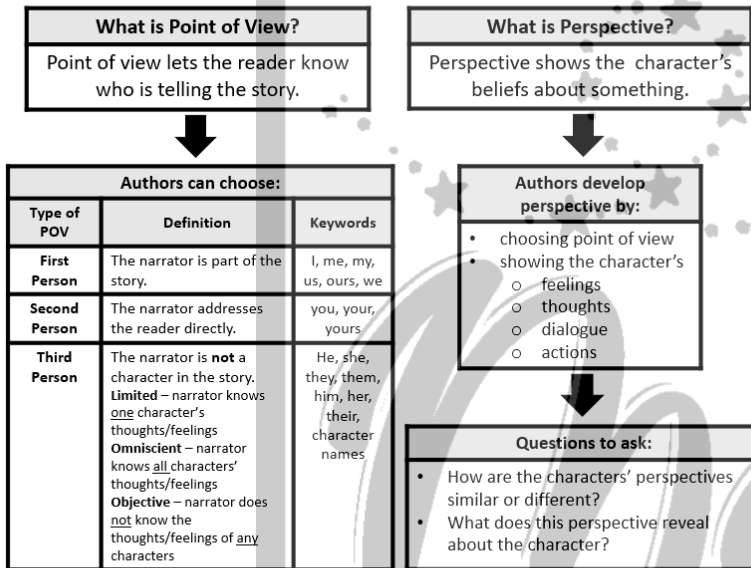

TAKE A PEEK

Contrast Point of View

Readers analyze point of view and perspective to better comprehend a story.

To analyze the point of view and perspective of a story:

1. Look at the pronouns used in the story to determine the author's chosen point of view.
2. Determine what role the character has in the story. Are they the narrator? The protagonist? The antagonist? A supporting character? Something else?
3. Determine the character's perspective about something in the story by looking at what the character feels, thinks, says, and does using text evidence from the story.
4. Compare/contrast multiple characters' perspectives in the story by showing how they are alike or different.
5. Summarize what the perspectives reveal about the characters in the story.

Contrast Point of View

Let's Try! Read the passage "Party Time" below, then answer the questions on the graphic organizer.

"Why are you not ready yet, Abby?" Madison stands in my bedroom doorway, wearing her brand new dress and the strappy, grown-up sandals she'd begged Mom to buy her. Her long, brown hair is perfectly styled in big curls per usual, her fingernails are painted a bright pink, and she's broken out the extra-shiny lip gloss.

On the other hand, I am slouched on my bean bag chair in cotton shorts with a pizza sauce stain on them from last night and an old T-shirt that says Shh, I'm Still Asleep on it. My feet are bare, my hair is in a tangled ponytail, and I'm just now realizing I have a streak of dried, purple paint on my forearm from the art project I was trying to finish earlier.

"The invitation said the party doesn't start until 6:30," I tell my twin sister as I rise from the bean bag chair and find a small can of paint thinner among my art supplies.

Madison juts an arm out toward the time display on my laptop screen. "Yeah, and it's 6:15 right now. We're going to be late by the time you clean all this up." She whips an index finger from my head to my toes and back to my head, looking at me as if I'm a hideous swamp monster.

I dab some paint thinner onto a rag and wipe at the paint streak on my arm, successfully removing it but then catching a glimpse of my artwork. I finally see what's missing, so I grab a paintbrush to add more reflections on the surface of the pond, but Madison rips the brush from my grip.

"There's no time for painting right now!" She slaps the paintbrush down on my desk and marches me into our shared bathroom, depositing me in front of the wall mirror. "You need every minute to work on this piece of art right here." She points to my reflection, and honestly, she's not wrong.

I reach into the shower stall and turn on the water, but Madison shrieks at me.

"Are you serious? A full shower? Now?" That vein on the side of her head is doing that pulsing thing it does whenever she's on the verge of wanting to throttle me, which is often. We're twins, but other than sharing a similar physical appearance, we're at opposite ends of the continuum. Madison is Type A, and they don't have a name for whatever type I am.

"Relax, Madison," I say, grabbing a towel from the closet. "We don't have to actually be at the party at 6:30."

"If an invite says 6:30, it means 6:30," Madison says, folding her arms across her chest.

A Place to Call Home

Yeodyn pulled back on her bow, an arrow notched and ready to soar toward her target which, in this case, was a beefy ogre who had her friend, Milos, in his wagon cage. The ogre had swept through the village market and captured several elves. A little asking around had informed Yeodyn that the ogre king, Grossel, was planning to mine at the foothills of Mount Aradell.

Well, King Grossel would not be using Milos or any of the other elves as miners in whatever nonsense he was involved in now.

Squinting one eye from the top of the hill she occupied, Yeodyn lined up her shot, aimed right for the ogre's chest, and let go of the bowstring and arrow.

But the arrow did not launch as she had expected it to, as it had on every other occasion of her using her bow. Instead, the arrow hovered in the air as if suspended by invisible strings. She lowered her bow and circled her hand around the arrow, but no strings held it stationary.

"Killing that ogre will be akin to kicking a hornet's nest," a voice said behind Yeodyn. "He may fall, but dozens more ogres will emerge, and you'll never see your friend again."

Slowly, Yeodyn turned to find a male in a long, black cloak, his pale purple eyes alerting her to the fact that he was a mage. Her mother had warned her about mages, saying they were not to be trusted. They had the ability to harness the elements and weave spells and change perception.

Yeodyn snatched her arrow and immediately notched it in her bow, aiming now at the mage instead of the ogre. "There is only one ogre with the wagon cage," she said, "and this arrow is meant for him. Do not make me waste it on you."

The mage put up his hands, a faint smile tilting up his lips as he regarded her. He lowered his hood to reveal jet-black hair that hung to his shoulders, some of it hooked behind his left ear.

A pointed ear, like hers.

"You are elf and mage?" Her mother had never said anything about elves who possessed magic.

1. Which point of view did the author choose to tell this story?
 - a. first person
 - b. second person
 - c. third person
 - d. second and third person
2. How are Yeodyn's and Walvir's perspectives about attacking ogres different?
 - a. Yeodyn wants to outsmart the ogres, but Walvir wants to use magic.
 - b. Yeodyn wants to let the ogres go, but Walvir doesn't.
 - c. Yeodyn wants to attack the one ogre, but Walvir knows there are many ogres to come.
 - d. Yeodyn wants to follow the ogres to the king, but Walvir wants to attack now.
3. What specific motivations do Yeodyn and Walvir each have to eliminate ogres? Use evidence from the text to support your answer.

Contrast Point of View Name: _____ Date: _____

4. This question has two parts. First, answer Part A. Then, answer Part B.

Part A: How does Yeodyn feel about Walvir being caught between being an elf and a mage?

- a. angry
- b. sympathetic
- c. guilty
- d. suspicious

Part B: Which quote from the text below best supports the answer in part A?

- a. "Yeodyn snatched her arrow and immediately notched it in her bow, aiming now at the mage instead of the ogre." (paragraph 7)
- b. "That must plague you," Yeodyn said for so much of who she was and what she did was tied to her elven heritage." (paragraph 14)
- c. "Where do you call home then? Where are your parents?" (paragraph 27)
- d. "I am just a passerby." Walvir pulled up his hood and started to walk away, but Yeodyn tugged him back by his cloak sleeve." (paragraph 35)

5. Based on this story, how would Yeodyn most likely have felt if the ogres had succeeded in taking Milos and the other elves? Provide evidence from the text to support your response.

Remember When We

I stood outside my grandfather's room, a three-hundred-piece puzzle of a Niagara Falls scene and a package of gummy bears tucked under my arm. I'd promised my mother I'd visit him by myself while she and my dad were on vacation in Hawaii for two weeks and I was staying with my aunt, but honestly, I'd been dreading fulfilling that promise.

Sure, I loved Gramps, and we used to spend entire summers together when I was younger while my parents were at work. We'd tended Gramps' garden where he grew enough veggies that we'd put them in baskets and bring them to the neighbors. We'd built treehouses and blanket forts and watched every superhero movie ever made. We'd gone bike riding and hiking and swimming. Gramps had been the one who had taught me how to play baseball, and now I was an all-star player in my town's league with my eye on playing in high school and maybe beyond.

"You've got great hand-eye coordination," Gramps had said after my first game where I'd smashed a home run. "That's how you connect the bat with the ball, kid." I thought of him saying that every time it was my turn to bat, and every home run since then had been a dedication to my grandfather.

But Gramps didn't remember me now. He didn't even know my name or that we were related. His Alzheimer's had worsened, and though he was happy to have visitors, that was all I was to him — some random guest who happened to stop by his room at the assisted living facility. So many of the things I wanted to say to him started with the words remember when we, but he didn't remember when we, couldn't remember, wouldn't ever remember.

Sucking in a breath, I squared my shoulders and knocked on his door. Gramps never said to come in because he didn't realize that knocking meant someone wanted to be let in. I turned the knob and opened the door just a fraction so I could peek into the room.

Gramps sat in a powder blue easy chair facing the window. The staff at the assisted living facility said he liked to watch the birds at the feeder they'd

Making History

"Remind me why I signed up for this experience." Divya checked her seatbelt for the eight thousandth time by tugging on it like it was rappelling gear. "I could have conducted a research study on the life cycles of Martian crogunes for my end-of-year project and stayed at home with my internet connection, spreadsheets, and data."

"That would have been boring, though, as crogunes only have three phases in their life cycles." Marc flicked switches on the dashboard in front of them, and Divya hoped he knew what he was doing. She'd worked with him on prepping for this launch for the entire semester, and she trusted him in theory, but anything could go wrong on their maiden flight. Sure, there was emergency personnel on the base should anything catastrophic occur, but that didn't mean those professionals could actually get to Divya or Marc in time to prevent any fatalities.

"Boring, perhaps," Divya said, "but much safer. I thought I'd like the adrenaline rush of launching a pod we'd designed ourselves over the semester, but so far, it's just given me a massive stomachache and a case of dry mouth, and last night I didn't catch even a second of sleep."

"Well, that all sounds unpleasant, but we've got this, Divya." Marc adjusted a few dials and checked energy levels before looking at her. "Every single simulation we have run pointed to a successful launch today, and the weather is cooperating with crystal clear skies, so there is absolutely no reason to worry."

"Which is, by itself, a reason to worry. Whenever everything looks perfect, it's probably because some grave mistake is being overlooked." Divya checked all the dials and levels herself to be sure Marc hadn't made any errors.

"You need to relax or you're not going to enjoy one moment of this flight." Marc readjusted one of the dials Divya had just touched and blocked her hand from touching it again. "All the settings are perfect, just the way we'd planned them to be, so quit fidgeting and worrying and stalling. We decided to do this project to be different, to make a statement, and to perhaps solve some of the engineering problems pod builders have been
