Lily loved gardening more than anything. She spent every afternoon tending to her plants, talking to them as if they were her friends. One day, she noticed her neighbor, Mr. Jones, struggling to keep his garden alive. Remembering how her grandmother taught her to garden, Lily decided to help. "Plants need patience and love," she explained to Mr. Jones, showing him how to water and care for them properly. Together, they watched as Mr. Jones's garden slowly came back to life, blooming brightly.

In a lush forest in Asia, a rabbit wished to offer something special to the Moon Goddess, who provided light in the darkness and guided the creatures of the night. Unlike other animals who boasted of grand offerings, Rabbit knew he had only his kindness and bravery. When the Moon Goddess disguised herself as a hungry old woman, only Rabbit offered himself as food, willing to jump into the fire to feed her. Touched by his selflessness, the Goddess revealed herself and lifted Rabbit to the moon, where his image remains as a symbol of selfless giving and compassion.
